

This is a book visualizing the 100 most recent images from the phones of 12 people. It's an exercise in data design and an exploration into how much one can learn about the lives of others through the data we all unknowingly collect every day.

Hello, friends.

Welcome to my overly-nosey and slightly weird project.

would you be willing to give me the last 100-200 photos on your phone for my final data visualization project where i analyze the kinds of photos ppl take nowadays? u can chose to leave any photos out, and i just need the category and metadata so no one would actually see your pics

Sounds guuuucci

It's all just memes

11/20/19, 12:45 PM

Yah I can tomorrow

Lmao sure

When you need them by?

11/21/19, 2:29 PM

Not sure how helpful mine will be

Because my job is weird

I mean sure

But there might be some of my ass

lol

I'll sort them out

And give u a few tomorrow?

Uh sure idc, but I mostly have references for my drawings

Like downloaded photos

Is that okay or do you want the ones I've taken

First, thanks to the 11 people who were nice enough to let me into their phones and hand over images.

It was a weird request, and you did it anyway.

I think 20-somethings are really interesting! Phones are a good way to see that because our camera rolls are filled with just the stupidest, most wonderful garbage. So many memes were sent to me for this project and I've had an absolutely great time looking through them (and adding them to my own camera roll in turn).

So, I asked 11 people to send me the last 100 items in their phone's camera roll, whatever they were (but everyone was allowed to not send any private photos they didn't want to, so long as I still received 100 in total). I also included my own for comparison for a grand total of 1200 images, all represented in different ways through this book.

It's been hella fun.

I had a lot of videos for a project that was happening at the time.

Each arc shows the duration of one video. All lines begin at 00:00 and progress through 00:30 as the longest video was around 29 seconds.

Carly truly had the most random
collection of images.
Chaotic Evil.

A solid line is a continous burst of related images; a line made up of individual blocks means the theme was the same (all memes, maybe) but they're unrelated in content and source. A single block means an image of a completely different subject matter with no correlation to the image before or after.

Tara's 100 photos are only spread across 4 days, the least out of all contributors.

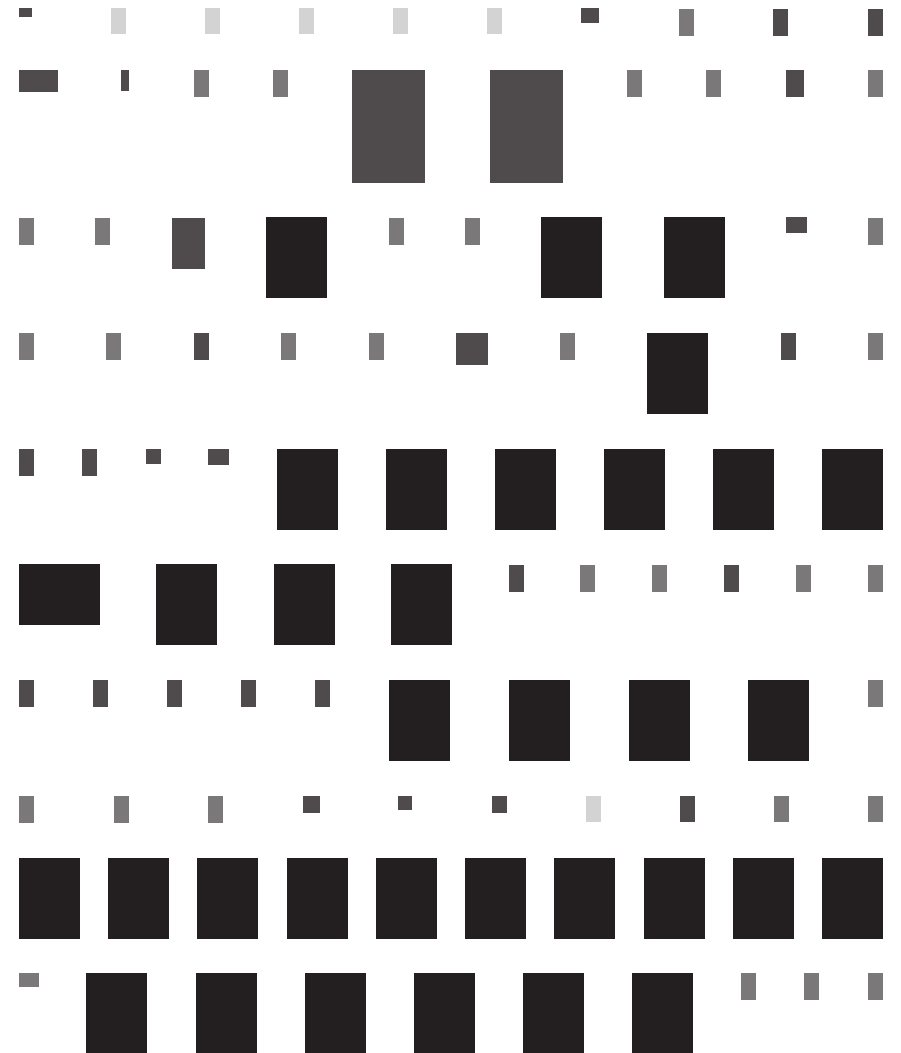

A lot of Tara's photos aren't intentional - any content sent in WhatsApp conversation automatically saved to her phone's camera roll.

Out of Trevor's 34 photos categorized as "of someone else," 26 were of the same person.

In other words, nearly all of his photos that are categorized as "of someone else" are of one individual, not a variety of people or groups. The dotted line connecting icons mean the images are from the same day.

a) taken by a phone and b) were of people.

Claudia had the most sequences, or images of the same content taken in a row.

Though there were many instances of 2 images in a row, I defined “sequence” as 3 or more images taken of the same content also immediately after one another. Claudia had 13 sequences throughout.

If everyone’s camera rolls were averaged together, these would be the new 100 images.

Is any content of another contributor?

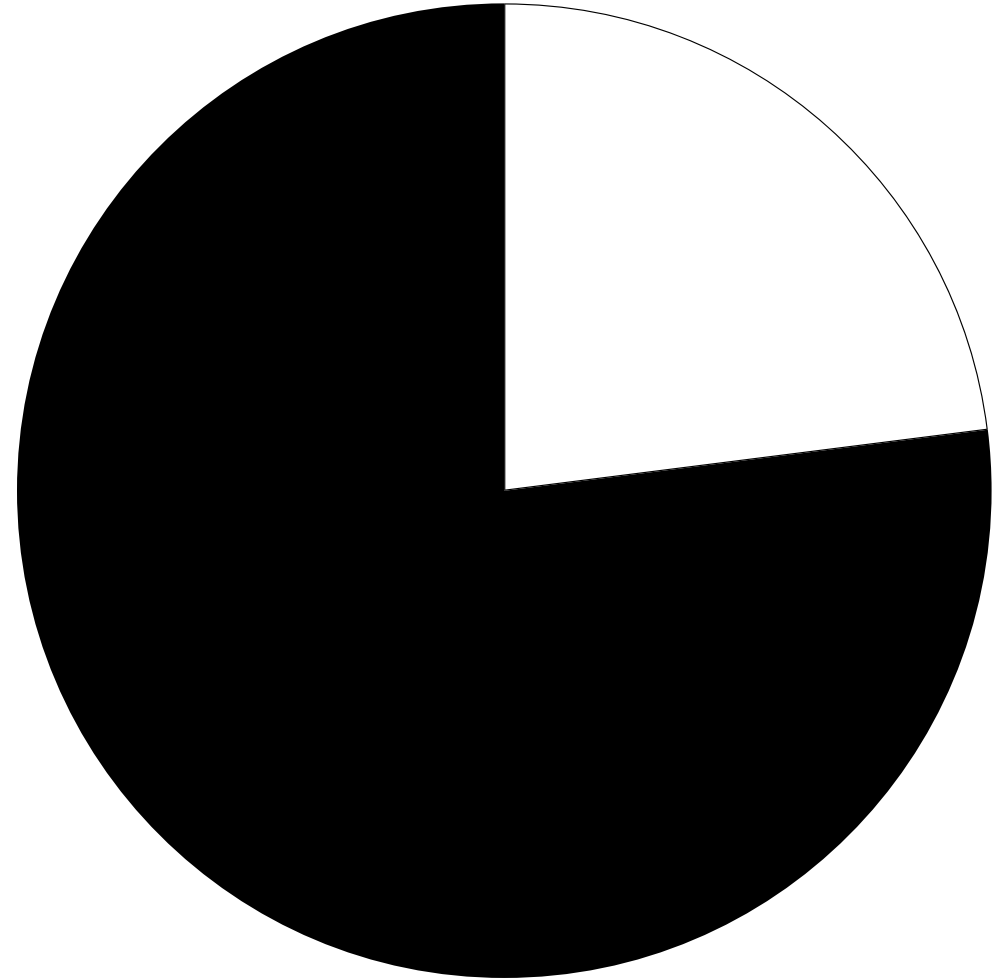

There sure was. Each line represents a photo by one person of the individual on the connecting side. The weight of the line shows the strength of the connection with 1px = 1 image.

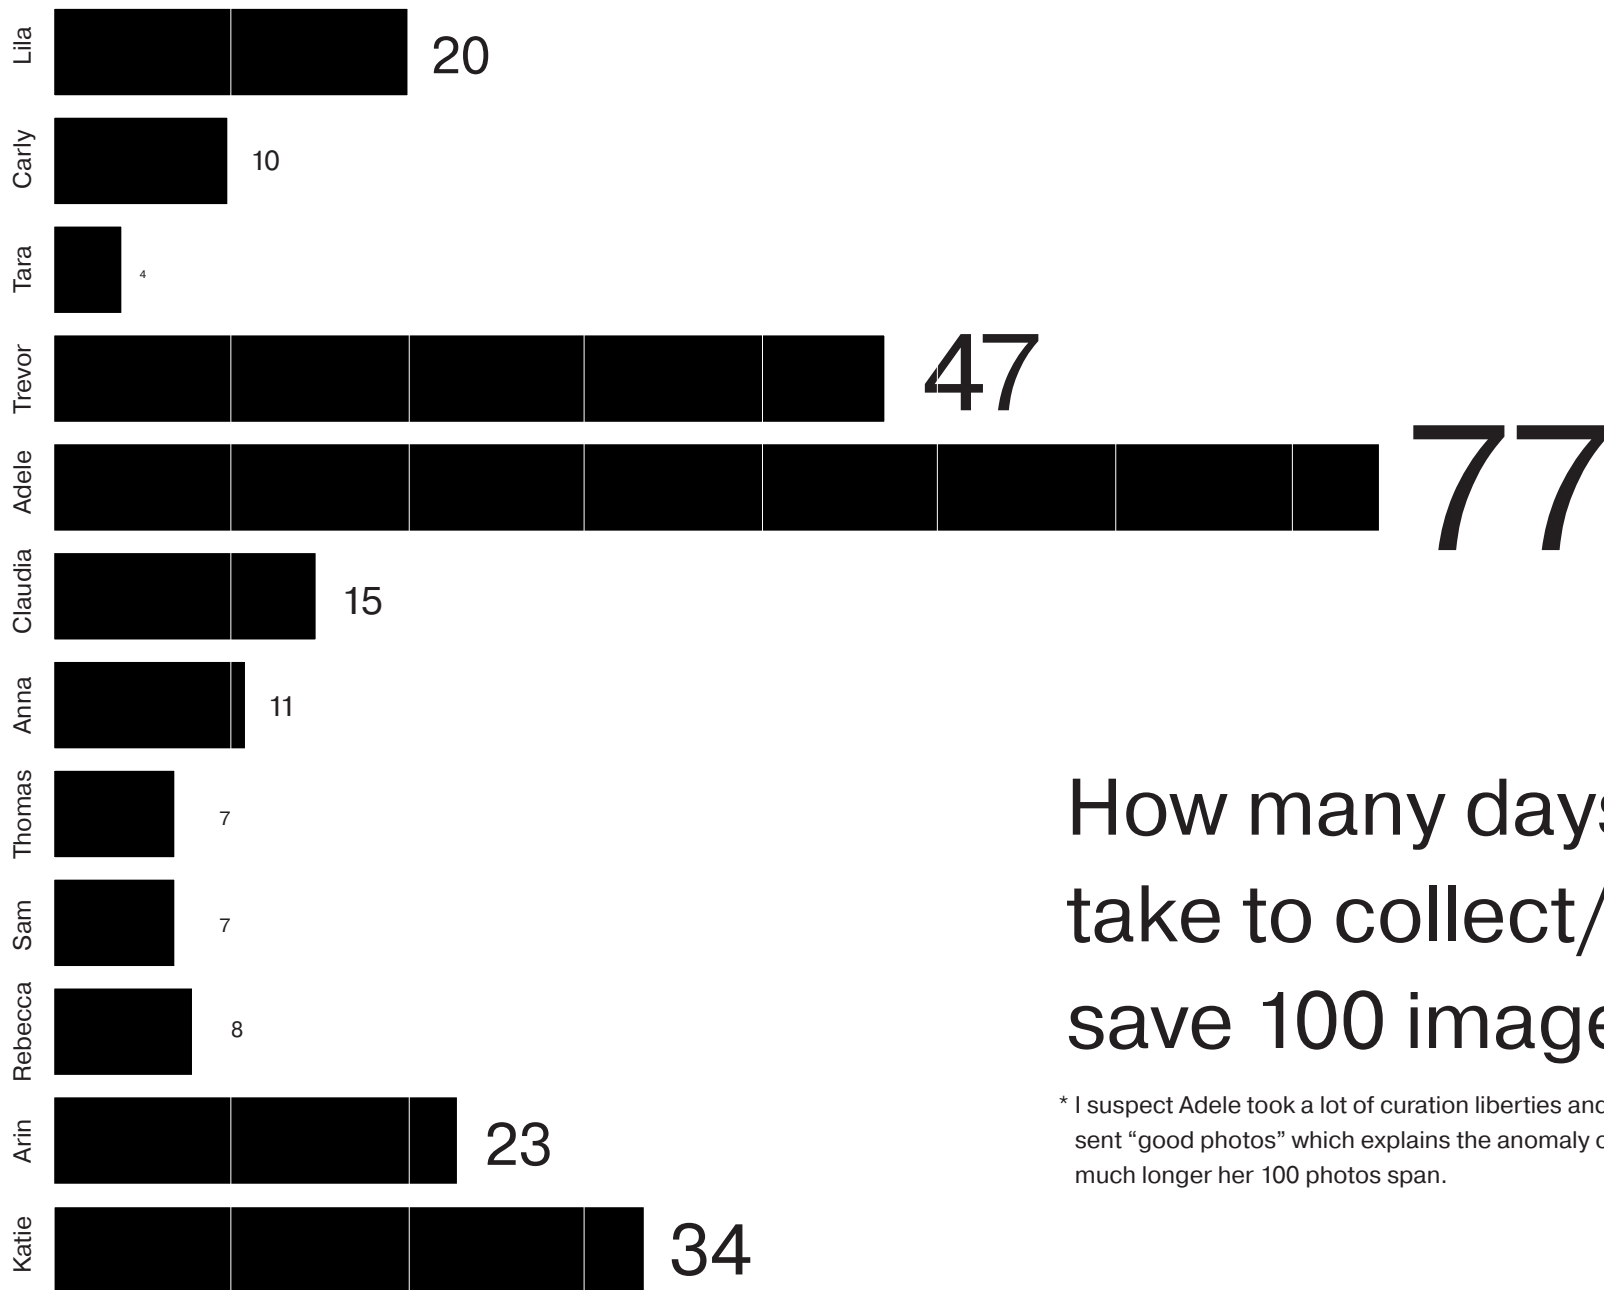

If Person A had images of Person B, that's one line. If it's vice versa (B of A) there is a second line; the two directions are not combined.

How many days did it take to collect/take/save 100 images?

* I suspect Adele took a lot of curation liberties and only sent "good photos" which explains the anomaly of how much longer her 100 photos span.

What can be learned about each person from time metadata?

What can be learned about each person from their time metadata? Night owl or morning person? So, for example, the black square here signifies that the person took or saved an image between 6:00:00 am and

Overall, there is higher concentration of images during the second half of the day (12pm-11:59pm) but otherwise, the times are fairly evenly distributed.

Color

Each segment is 1 contributor's most prominent color out of all 100 images.

Is there an average color trend?

I used a website (<https://matkl.github.io/average-color/>) that uses JavaScript to average the color in an image and provides a single output.

Each horizontal bar is the average color of one photo.

What are the most dominant colors?

Lila Carly Tara Trevor Adele Claudia

I used a p5 library that pulls the most dominant colors out of an image. Each horizontal bar represents the 16 most prominent colors of one image

Part 3

The Raw Data

I chose not to include the actual photos for a reason - they're just the raw data I needed and rendered meaningless by an entire book that visualizes them in other ways. But, if you insist, these cards are provided for your curiosity.

Bye, friends.

Til my next (inevitable) overlynosey and weird project.
